

How strangely to-night our fancy flings
From the face of the past shadowy wings,
And we are far back through the mist and tears,
From the long past of twenty years,
When life seemed taking a lease of Fate,
From the wonderful "now" of "long ago,"
To the faded shade that we call "now."

Those halcyon days, there were four of us then—
Lynch and Ned, and Tom and Ben.
Now all are gone: Tom was first to die;
From the long past of twenty years,
When life seemed taking a lease of Fate,
From the wonderful "now" of "long ago,"
To the faded shade that we call "now."

And the others too, they all are dead,
From the long past of twenty years,
When life seemed taking a lease of Fate,
From the wonderful "now" of "long ago,"
To the faded shade that we call "now."

And the others too, they all are dead,
From the long past of twenty years,
When life seemed taking a lease of Fate,
From the wonderful "now" of "long ago,"
To the faded shade that we call "now."

And the others too, they all are dead,
From the long past of twenty years,
When life seemed taking a lease of Fate,
From the wonderful "now" of "long ago,"
To the faded shade that we call "now."

And the others too, they all are dead,
From the long past of twenty years,
When life seemed taking a lease of Fate,
